Do you want to know more about Feminist Climate Justice?

Discover how climate change disproportionately affects women and marginalised communities in Ireland, and what can be done about it. Our Feminist Climate Justice Report covers all the critical areas related to climate policy making and our net-zero transition: just transition, care, energy poverty and housing, transport, health, and food, land use, agriculture and biodiversity. It explores existing international examples of good practice, including from fellow EU member states, and how we can strengthen the intersectional gender proofing of our climate policies. Empower yourself with the knowledge to advocate for a fair, inclusive, and gender-sensitive climate action, ensuring a just and equitable future for all. Scan the above QR code to access the report summary.

Feminist Communities for Climate Justice is a joint project between the National Women's Council and Community Work Ireland that highlights the disproportionate impacts of the climate crisis on women and marginalised communities in Ireland. Feminist climate justice recognises that climate breakdown impacts women and disadvantaged groups more despite their lesser contribution to emissions causing climate change and pays attention to the gendered and intersectional characteristics of all dimensions of climate justice. The project:

- Amplifies the voices and experiences of women and marginalised communities
  - Advocates and influences policy
  - Mobilises communities
  - Strengthens capacity and raises consciousness
